TFC Recycling

From humble beginnings, this Chesapeake-based, family-owned business is now the largest recycler in Virginia

Michael “Recycle” Benedetto, President and Owner of TFC Recycling
NOW SELLING
Amenity-Filled Community for Those 55 & Better

Prices Starting in the Low $400,000s
The Retreat at Western Branch features beautiful home designs with two-car garages and first floor primary suites. Enjoy modern amenities like a resort style clubhouse with pool, fitness center, billiard room, outdoor grilling stations and gas fire pit.

TheRetreatAtWesternBranch.com
Doreen Giuliano | 757-676-3787 • Donna Lakoski | 757-472-8058

LIVE LIFE SOCIALLY
According to the Declaration of Independence, governments “derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.” This means if people don’t like their government, they have the right to change it. Here in the U.S.A., the vehicle of that change is the vote. Though change often comes too slowly for many, it wouldn’t come at all if every adult U.S. citizen didn’t have—and exercise—this foundational right.

National Voter Registration Day, on September 20th, is an all-out effort to convince all American citizens of voting age to exercise that right and, if they haven’t yet registered to vote, to do so. Volunteers and organizations nationwide collaborate by setting up registration tables, knocking on doors, or producing social and mass media awareness campaigns on the importance of registering to vote. Imagine over 10,000 volunteers working together one full day to educate Americans on one of our most precious rights. On National Voter Registration Day 2016, over 750,000 American citizens registered to exercise a fundamental right that is denied to millions of people in other nations.

National Voter Registration Day is also a reminder of what is required to vote. You must be at least 18 years old, a U.S. citizen, and a current resident of your state. When you see a National Voter Registration Day table or volunteer, you can do more than just register. You can also confirm your polling place, update your registration details, or get more information on upcoming elections.

— Rob Lauer

“A safe place for our families
Best education for our children
Open for business
Upgrade city services - return of curbside recycling without raising taxes
Economic edge with responsible growth
Fight for tax reductions

We are proud to support Amanda for City Council. Her experience as an attorney and commitment to our City will be a welcome addition to City Council.”

-Senator John Cosgrove & Mayor Rick West

“I'd be honored to have your vote on November 8th! — Amanda

www.AmandaNewins.com
campaign@amandanewins.com
@amandanewins

Paid for and authorized by Friends of Amanda Newins

Supporting small businesses in Hampton Roads since 1903.

How? Through...
- Education & training
- Connections & collaboration
- Advocacy

Are you a small business owner interested in learning more? Scan here!
or visit retailalliance.com
These problems can lead to a shorter joint disease, to name just a few. Other helpful actions that can be taken include feeding a measured amount of food at designated feeding times, increasing physical activity, or refraining from feeding unhealthy snacks—especially table food. Consistency and diligence in providing the best feeding habits for our pets can help ensure they maintain a healthy weight and therefore become healthy pets.

---

Healthy Weight, Healthy Pet

We love to feed our pets. It shows our attention to and care for them. Who doesn’t like to see their puppy prancing and jumping in expectation as you head to the cupboard where their treats are kept? Who can resist your kitty laying on your chest as you are trying to sleep and giving you gentle but urgent head bumps as if saying: “Hey! Wake up! It’s time for me to eat.”

Feeding time—especially feeding a special treat to our pets and watching them enjoy it, helps to strengthen the human-animal bond. This helps to reverse the problem of unhealthy weight and the pet is carried any more weight than they should, visit your veterinarian to determine what may be the best course of action to take. Your veterinarian may recommend a special diet to encourage active weight loss. In some instances, he or she may also recommend lab work to rule out underlying conditions that could contribute to or result from the extra weight. Other helpful actions that can be taken include feeding a special treat to our pets and watching them enjoy it helps to strengthen the human-animal bond ...

---

Making Wise Choices

Part I of 5

Would you marry this person?

Must your child go to the same school? Is her figure in your eyes?

Marry! Are you kidding me? I wouldn’t even meet this person in broad daylight at Grand Central Station surrounded by the entire New York City Police SWAT team.

The above writing specimen has the following danger signs that indicate hostility: Aggressiveness: (upstroke that departs obliquely from a downstroke) Argumentativeness: (seen in the buckle lead-in stroke to the small letter p) Defiance: (buckle of the small letter k inflated out of proportion to the rest of lower case letters) The writer feels defiance when he senses that others are exercising unfair rule and restraint of his freedom. The writer may not display anger openly; he may find quiet, well-mannered ways of defying. Dominativeness: (light or heavy t-bar slanted forward and downward, like a dagger) irrigatation to control, the writer shows frustration in his sarcasm. If the t-bar is light, the writer will try to control others with light sarcasm. If the bar is heavy, the commands can be brutal. The writer feels a need to be demanding in order to get other people to do things for him. Irritability: a mild hostility trait, telling others to keep their distance. (i-dots made with jabs or irregular short dashes) The writer is provoked by trifles. Can appear in writing temporarily as when a person comes home from work with the day’s tensions. Resentment: always shows hostility to some degree (straight initial upstroke that begins at or below the baseline). The writer has felt imposition in the past, and is “on guard” against it happening again. Long resentment stroke indicates that the resentment comes from a time well in the past.

Stubbornness: (a wedge usually seen in t- or d-stems) Definitely ego-protective, stubbornness is about “saving face.” Temper: the writer with flying t-bars, or very heavy jabbed i-or j-dots, has a readiness to lose his temper when frustrated.

When you correspond with unknowns from the internet or personal ads, what you see may not be what you get. Proceed with great caution!
Publisher’s Point

I am a Storyteller!

by Jean Loxley-Barnard

I have been a storyteller for as long as I can remember. And it fits into what I do with our magazines. Actually, if we stop to ponder what kind of information we want to impart, there are many choices.

"Just the facts" is one objective in communication. “The Truth and nothing but the Truth” reaches for more information. Then, my desire for “color” fits in at length.

I always want to share the “color.” For instance, when we write stories about our clients and neighbors, my goal is to leave our readers with as pertinent a description as possible. Here is as good an example as comes to my mind: Jon Pittman is the owner of the Moyock Farm Market. I could communicate just that to you very quickly. But I think your picture of who this man is becomes more full when I write that Jon is following in his grandfather’s footsteps. Even more of the picture develops when I add that Jon is a part-time deputy sheriff married to a beautiful soul, Jamie, and they have a son and daughter.

Knowing who someone is, and not just what they do, gives us more information about whom we trust in our business dealings, our homes, and even our lives.

Knowing who someone is, and not just what they do, gives us more information about whom we trust in our business dealings, our homes, and even our lives.

Knowing who someone is, and not just what they do, gives us more information about whom we trust in our business dealings, our homes, and even our lives.

There is even more to consider than good business dealings. Sometimes, even often, we form friendships with those who appear in our lives. Doctor Brian Midgette entered my life in 1989 and became a man I admired. Midgette Family Dentistry in Western Branch is one practice I have always been proud to share with our readers. The Edinburgh Dentistry group I go to on this eastern side of Chesapeake also projects a long-time, friendly feeling.

I want my magazines to be personal enough to give readers a true and accurate picture of who our clients are. By now, Barry Hobbs of Addition Associates is someone I have been proud to introduce to our readers for twenty-five years. Barry is a true gentleman and calls me “Dear Heart.” I have always loved that compliment. One of his happy clients told me years ago, “We were so sorry when his men finished our kitchen job! We missed them coming every morning!” WOW!

Have you ever heard, “The proof of the pudding is in the details?” I believe in that concept. Telling too much information can be boring and time-consuming, but all relevant information should be shared. I am in the information business and believe it is in your best interest for me to share it.

Shopper reader, meet Shopper client. Neighbors like to do business with neighbors!

Welcome back

Lori Granger has returned to The Shopper. After living in Rhode Island, Lori has returned to Southside Hampton Roads and The Shopper.

Lori is an outstanding Account Executive who truly loves working with Entrepreneurs to promote their businesses. And they are delighted to have her back!

Friends can welcome Lori back to The Shopper where she can be contacted at 757-547-0520 or receive email at lorigranger@gmail.com

Publisher/CEO
Jean Loxley-Barnard

Operations Manager
Denise Ferrell

Editor
Rob Lauer

Graphic Designer
Jennifer Tolarchyk

Public Relations
Amy Brewer

Account Executives
Denise Ferrell
Amy Brewer
Lori Granger

Senior Writers
Rob Lauer
Candance Moore
Cristi Sanchez

Writers
Christine Knapp
Kathy VanMullekom

Web Site Development
Internet Marketing & Design
(www.internetmark.com)

Photographers
Terry Barnard
Michele Thompson

For advertising information call
(757) 547-0520
Email: theshopper.information@gmail.com
www.TheShopper.com

The Shopper is a monthly, direct-mail, magazine serving six community editions in Chesapeake, Portsmouth, Suffolk, Smithfield, Carrollton, in Virginia and communities in northeastern North Carolina. The Shopper has a circulation of at least 10,000 printed and distributed in each zone. Additional issues are placed in our advertisers’ stores and in professional offices in our circulation area. Opinions expressed by contributors are not necessarily the opinion of this publication. ©2022
National Family Health and Fitness Day, September 24th

National Family Health and Fitness Day, on the last Saturday of September, promotes families incorporating exercise and a healthy diet into their lifestyle. Heredity certainly influences a family’s health—with paternal genes having a more dominant effect than maternal genes. But a family’s shared habits have as profound an effect on their health as their shared genes. Families tend to eat the same types of foods, in the same amounts, at the same frequency. They also tend to share the same patterns of physical activity or inactivity. All of which points to an uncomfortable truth: our best efforts to break unhealthy habits can be unintentionally undermined by the very people who love us the most. Thankfully, Family Health and Fitness Day USA promotes families prioritizing healthy living together.

Healthy living is the practice of making choices and doing activities that promote physical, mental, and spiritual well-being. As simple and straightforward as that may seem, it has not been the norm for most families throughout history.

Before the 1700s, the health threat facing most families was epidemic disease, such as plague, cholera, and smallpox. A family’s eating habits were usually the result of their social status. Wealthier families could afford tastier, healthier foods, while lower-class families survived on less healthy food in smaller portions.

The 1800s saw the birth of the one-dish meal. Most families weren’t wealthy, and cooking equipment was limited, so they often cooked meals in one stew for dinner. Nutrition wasn’t their main priority. Since many were working families, they cared about filling foods that gave them the high calories needed for physical labor.

In the early 1900s, most meals were prepared from whatever was available in a family’s garden, cellar, or icebox. The majority of Americans, still living in rural areas, might have to travel some distance to get to their “local” general store to buy canned goods. Americans living in towns and cities had easier access to such items but tended to buy most of their groceries from neighborhood vegetable stands and butcher shops. When the first fast-food chain, White Castle, was introduced in 1921, it changed the nation’s attitudes toward processed foods.

In the 1940s, the American Medical Association and the National Committee on Physical Fitness encouraged physical exercise and nutritious eating to improve the nation’s overall health. But it was an uphill climb, thanks to the rise of national fast-food chains, such as McDonald’s, in the mid-1950s. By the 1960s and 70s, convenience trumped nutrition at mealtime. As the average American’s weight and waistline increased, the American lifestyle became less physically active and more sedentary — resulting in a rise in high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes, obesity, and other life-threatening conditions.

In 1996, the Health and Information Resource Center created Family Health and Fitness Day USA, understanding that when families strive to be healthy together, their success rate increases. Incorporating exercise and a healthy diet into a family’s lifestyle is a team effort. It’s kind of like celebrations. Who celebrates alone?

– Rob Lauer

Spotlight on the 2023/2024 VHSL Realignment

Most people know that high school athletics in Virginia are sanctioned by the Virginia High School League (VHSL). What is not well-known is how schools are grouped and that every three to four years, the VHSL realigns schools, thus changing regional and state level opponents in the Commonwealth’s high schools. The next realignment is set to take place in the 2023-2024 athletic season, running through the 2027 season. The Alignment Committee’s recently-submitted proposal will impact several of our local schools, and it can get complicated, but we have you covered with all you need to know!

First, it is important to understand how schools are sectioned. There are districts, regions, and classes. Districts—the smallest of the entities—are given names along with common opponents that comprise a school’s district schedule. Examples of local districts in our area are the Southeastern District (Great Bridge, Grassfield, Hickory, etc.), the Beach District (Kellam, Ocean Lakes, Princess Anne, etc.), and the Eastern District (Churchland, Lake Taylor, Maury, etc.).

Next are the regions, which contain schools from all districts but are still geographically ordered. Regions are assigned by letter, either A, B, C, or D. Our local schools are Region A.

Lastly, and most importantly, there are classes, which are numbered 1 through 6. Classes group schools based on Average Daily Membership (ADM), aka enrollment. The theory behind grouping based on enrollment is that schools with large student bodies have more student-athletes to pull from, thus increasing their chances of having better athletes. This prevents a school like Lake Taylor, which has an ADM of 788, from having to go through schools like Grassfield (ADM of 1,700) for a regional or state title. My opinion is that classes are vital to ensuring competitive fairness at the regional and state levels of post-season play.

The current proposal on the table would impact six of our local schools: Kellam, Ocean Lakes, Deep Creek, Great Bridge, Hickory, and King’s Fork.

Below are two charts: one with the current class based on the 2018 realignment with ADM and one with the proposed class after realignment and the current ADM.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CURRENT SCHOOL</th>
<th>CURRENT CLASS</th>
<th>CURRENT ADM</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>KELLAM</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>2,045</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OCEAN LAKES</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>2,078</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEEP CREEK</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1,605</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GREAT BRIDGE</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1,380</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HICKORY</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,743</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KING’S FORK</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1,484</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>PROPOSED SCHOOL</th>
<th>PROPOSED CLASS</th>
<th>PROPOSED ADM</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>KELLAM</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>OCEAN LAKES</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DEEP CREEK</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,224</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GREAT BRIDGE</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HICKORY</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>1,173</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>KING’S FORK</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,355</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Send all nominations for local athletes to spotlight@spotswithbj@gmail.com

A 2007 Great Bridge High School graduate, Brandon Johnson is a freelance writer and podcaster, a baseball and basketball coach, and works at Centerville Insurance Agency.
Manipulation vs. Adjustment

In the simplest of terms, a subluxation can be thought of as a slight misalignment of a joint, or the inability for a joint to move the right way. Subluxation of the spinal vertebrae is particularly dangerous because it causes nerve interference and joint degeneration (arthritis). Long-term subluxation may absolutely lead to pain, discomfort, or other symptoms like numbness, tingling, muscle weakness, headaches, migraines and vertigo, just to name a few.

Chiropractic adjustments are the primary means of correcting subluxation. Chiropractors perform adjustments by applying a precisely directed force through a subluxated joint (usually the spinal vertebrae). Adjustments restore normal joint alignment and restore normal joint movement. Thereby restoring normal body function, allowing the joints and nervous system to heal, helping people recover from subluxation.

Adjustments are unique to the art of Chiropractic. Adjustments involve very high velocity forces. Meaning that the force of an adjustment is applied very quickly to ensure that the adjustment is neurologically effective. Those adjustment forces are also very low amplitude. In order to keep adjustments safe, the distance that a chiropractor moves a subluxated joint is very small, only millimeters in fact. The last distinguishing characteristic of the chiropractic adjustment is that it is very specific, targeting only subluxated joints.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Adjustment</th>
<th>Manipulation</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>High Velocity (Fast)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Low Velocity (Slow)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Low Amplitude (Low Range of Motion)</td>
<td>High Amplitude (Full Range of Motion)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Specific (Targets Subluxated Joints)</td>
<td>Non-Specific (Targets All Joints)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In contrast, manual therapies performed by other health care professionals are more accurately defined as: Manipulation. Manipulation uses slow, low velocity, high amplitude (full range of motion) movements to encourage a more extensive range of motion in a group of joints. Manipulation is highly therapeutic for its intended use, however it is unlikely to correct subluxation.

Some people mistakenly associate the “cracking” or “popping” sound that sometimes accompanies an adjustment with a “successful adjustment”. They think they are making an adjustment to a joint when they crack or pop their own neck or knuckles. But this cracking sound (called cavitation) is just incidental noise caused by changing the pressure in the fluid within the joint capsule. One might get momentary relief by releasing feel-good neurotransmitters, but cracking one’s joints is not making an adjustment and does nothing to correct a subluxation.

A chiropractor spends thousands of hours perfecting the art of adjustment by feeling the spine and its movement. Chiropractors not only use their hands to manually create adjustments, but also specific tools. These adjustment tools, either mechanical, as in the Activator, or electromagnetic, as in the Arthorstim, mimic the doctor’s high-velocity, low-amplitude force in making specific adjustments. Sometimes these are safer, but equally effective options for patients with special clinical considerations, or even just an aversion to manual adjustments.

Properly applied, chiropractic adjustments are an extremely safe, effective, and cost efficient way to enhance the functionality of the nervous system, restore normal joint biomechanics, prevent arthritis and joint degeneration, and allow a patient to achieve and maintain the highest levels of health.

When is the First Day of Fall?

For many Americans, the fall season begins the week after Labor Day. Kids head back to school, Friday night football kicks off, and Halloween candy, decorations and costumes grace store aisles everywhere. The weather may still be hot and humid here in Hampton Roads, but everyone begins bracing for lower temperatures, shorter days, and longer nights.

Of course, the week after Labor Day is the unofficial beginning of fall. The official first day of fall is... when exactly? The date moves around from year to year, with many of us asking, sometime later in September, “Was today the first day of fall, or was it yesterday? Or is it tomorrow?” Sometime in late March, we usually face the same confusion regarding the first day of spring.

So when is the official first day of fall in 2022? And why is the date different every year? To answer those questions, we have to consult the heavens—in particular, the sun and the Earth’s yearly journey around it.

The name for the first day of fall is the Fall Equinox. The word “equinox” comes from two Latin terms: aequeus, which means equal, andnox, which means night. So equinox literally means “equal night.”

According to the National Weather Service, an equinox occurs two times each year when the number of daylight hours and nighttime hours in a single day is equal. This happens because the Earth’s axis is tilted neither toward nor away from the sun. Because the sun is over the equator on those two days, the amount of daylight and darkness is the same across the entire Earth.

The Spring Equinox usually takes place between March 20th and 21st. The Fall Equinox usually takes place between September 22nd and 23rd.

This year (2022), fall begins officially on Thursday, September 22nd. If one wants to get even more precise, in our region of the eastern seaboard, fall begins that evening at 9:02 p.m.

~ Rob Lauer

Endless Decorating Possibilities

Custom Shades, Blinds & Shutters Upholstery & Slip Covers
Custom Window Treatments Wallpaper Energy Efficient Options
Decorator Fabrics

Fabric Factor

Wayside Village Shoppes | 4216 Virginia Beach Blvd, Ste 160
757-498-1536 | www.fabricfactor.com

Award-Winning Service Expert Advice • Free Consultation

September 2022 The Greenbrier/River Walk Shopper Page 7
October will feature some local election candidates

If you’re running for office in the upcoming local elections, then you obviously care about your city and have exciting ideas on how to improve life there for everyone. Why not introduce yourself to your fellow citizens and share your vision with them through a story in the upcoming October 2022 issue of The Shopper? For 42 years, readers across the Southside have been turning to our pages to read positive, uplifting and enlightening stories about local candidates. Contact us now to be a part of this special “Local Elections” issue!

Call (757) 547-0520 for information or to reserve your space

Direct Mailing to six community issues -
Great Bridge, Greenbrier/Riverwalk, Hickory/Moyock, Grassfield/Deep Creek, Western Branch/Churchland, Suffolk/Harborview/Smithfield
Plus, our huge online presence at TheShopper.com

(757) 547-0520 • email us: TheShopper.information@gmail.com

Be sure to check out all of our editions online at www.TheShopper.com

Two Mindsets

Recently, I’ve become addicted to the Home and Garden Channel. It’s a harmless addiction but not one of which I’m particularly proud. When winding down at night, reading a good book or watching some highly-acclaimed dramatic series seems like a better use of time. But lately, I can’t get enough of TV series featuring ordinary people either looking for “the house of their dreams” or having their current abode made over into said dreamhouse. The make-over shows appeal to my creative side, but I’m also intrigued by the home-buyers featured on series like “House Hunters.”

For those who don’t share my addiction, each episode of “House Hunters” features a couple searching for a new home in a particular city or town. Usually, they’re moving there because they’re starting a new job or retiring from an old one. The couple is paired with a real estate agent to whom they reveal the type of house they’re looking for and how much they’re willing to spend for it.

What some of these people think they can get for the money they’re willing to spend is the stuff of great comedy—or tragedy, take your pick. I mean, who actually believes that for $1,200 a month, they can get a three-bedroom/two-bath rental with a balcony within walking distance of the trendiest restaurants and shops in a major U.S. urban center? Before I became an addict, I would have said no one over the age of 12. But since my addiction, I’ve learned that such expectations are fairly common among Americans of all ages.

And speaking of Americans of all ages, what has fascinated me is how often these potential home buyers exhibit two particular mindsets.

Those with the first mindset, while wanting privacy when they close their front door, also want to walk out that door and be immersed in community. If they decide not to cook dinner, they want to stroll down the street to a local restaurant. When walking the dog, they want to pass other dog-walkers, window-shop, or grab a cup of coffee. They like living in the heart of the action.

The second mindset is the exact opposite. Give these folks a McMansion on 40,000 acres in some uncharted wilderness. If they can’t have that, they’ll take a house in the suburbs as long as they can’t see or be seen by neighbors. Their ideal backyard wouldn’t face another yard; it would overlook a swath of forest that might bring to mind a magnificent National Park…or the abode of a serial killer from a slasher film.

If one mindset craves the adrenaline rush of constant social connection, the other craves life in a fortress of solitude. I wonder if these mindsets in the extreme have something to do with the divisiveness currently wracking our nation.

Of course, millions of us are somewhere between these two mindsets. We love feeling connected to others while valuing the necessity of time alone. In the end, it’s all about finding the proper balance.

On the Front Porch with You by Rob Lauer

Two Mindsets

Recently, I’ve become addicted to the Home and Garden Channel. It’s a harmless addiction but not one of which I’m particularly proud. When winding down at night, reading a good book or watching some highly-acclaimed dramatic series seems like a better use of time. But lately, I can’t get enough of TV series featuring ordinary people either looking for “the house of their dreams” or having their current abode made over into said dreamhouse. The make-over shows appeal to my creative side, but I’m also intrigued by the home-buyers featured on series like “House Hunters.”

For those who don’t share my addiction, each episode of “House Hunters” features a couple searching for a new home in a particular city or town. Usually, they’re moving there because they’re starting a new job or retiring from an old one. The couple is paired with a real estate agent to whom they reveal the type of house they’re looking for and how much they’re willing to spend for it.

What some of these people think they can get for the money they’re willing to spend is the stuff of great comedy—or tragedy, take your pick. I mean, who actually believes that for $1,200 a month, they can get a three-bedroom/two-bath rental with a balcony within walking distance of the trendiest restaurants and shops in a major U.S. urban center? Before I became an addict, I would have said no one over the age of 12. But since my addiction, I’ve learned that such expectations are fairly common among Americans of all ages.

And speaking of Americans of all ages, what has fascinated me is how often these potential home buyers exhibit two particular mindsets.

Those with the first mindset, while wanting privacy when they close their front door, also want to walk out that door and be immersed in community. If they decide not to cook dinner, they want to stroll down the street to a local restaurant. When walking the dog, they want to pass other dog-walkers, window-shop, or grab a cup of coffee. They like living in the heart of the action.

The second mindset is the exact opposite. Give these folks a McMansion on 40,000 acres in some uncharted wilderness. If they can’t have that, they’ll take a house in the suburbs as long as they can’t see or be seen by neighbors. Their ideal backyard wouldn’t face another yard; it would overlook a swath of forest that might bring to mind a magnificent National Park…or the abode of a serial killer from a slasher film.

If one mindset craves the adrenaline rush of constant social connection, the other craves life in a fortress of solitude. I wonder if these mindsets in the extreme have something to do with the divisiveness currently wracking our nation.

Of course, millions of us are somewhere between these two mindsets. We love feeling connected to others while valuing the necessity of time alone. In the end, it’s all about finding the proper balance.

On the Front Porch with You by Rob Lauer

Two Mindsets

Recently, I’ve become addicted to the Home and Garden Channel. It’s a harmless addiction but not one of which I’m particularly proud. When winding down at night, reading a good book or watching some highly-acclaimed dramatic series seems like a better use of time. But lately, I can’t get enough of TV series featuring ordinary people either looking for “the house of their dreams” or having their current abode made over into said dreamhouse. The make-over shows appeal to my creative side, but I’m also intrigued by the home-buyers featured on series like “House Hunters.”

For those who don’t share my addiction, each episode of “House Hunters” features a couple searching for a new home in a particular city or town. Usually, they’re moving there because they’re starting a new job or retiring from an old one. The couple is paired with a real estate agent to whom they reveal the type of house they’re looking for and how much they’re willing to spend for it.

What some of these people think they can get for the money they’re willing to spend is the stuff of great comedy—or tragedy, take your pick. I mean, who actually believes that for $1,200 a month, they can get a three-bedroom/two-bath rental with a balcony within walking distance of the trendiest restaurants and shops in a major U.S. urban center? Before I became an addict, I would have said no one over the age of 12. But since my addiction, I’ve learned that such expectations are fairly common among Americans of all ages.

And speaking of Americans of all ages, what has fascinated me is how often these potential home buyers exhibit two particular mindsets.

Those with the first mindset, while wanting privacy when they close their front door, also want to walk out that door and be immersed in community. If they decide not to cook dinner, they want to stroll down the street to a local restaurant. When walking the dog, they want to pass other dog-walkers, window-shop, or grab a cup of coffee. They like living in the heart of the action.

The second mindset is the exact opposite. Give these folks a McMansion on 40,000 acres in some uncharted wilderness. If they can’t have that, they’ll take a house in the suburbs as long as they can’t see or be seen by neighbors. Their ideal backyard wouldn’t face another yard; it would overlook a swath of forest that might bring to mind a magnificent National Park…or the abode of a serial killer from a slasher film.

If one mindset craves the adrenaline rush of constant social connection, the other craves life in a fortress of solitude. I wonder if these mindsets in the extreme have something to do with the divisiveness currently wracking our nation.

Of course, millions of us are somewhere between these two mindsets. We love feeling connected to others while valuing the necessity of time alone. In the end, it’s all about finding the proper balance.

On the Front Porch with You by Rob Lauer

Two Mindsets

Recently, I’ve become addicted to the Home and Garden Channel. It’s a harmless addiction but not one of which I’m particularly proud. When winding down at night, reading a good book or watching some highly-acclaimed dramatic series seems like a better use of time. But lately, I can’t get enough of TV series featuring ordinary people either looking for “the house of their dreams” or having their current abode made over into said dreamhouse. The make-over shows appeal to my creative side, but I’m also intrigued by the home-buyers featured on series like “House Hunters.”

For those who don’t share my addiction, each episode of “House Hunters” features a couple searching for a new home in a particular city or town. Usually, they’re moving there because they’re starting a new job or retiring from an old one. The couple is paired with a real estate agent to whom they reveal the type of house they’re looking for and how much they’re willing to spend for it.

What some of these people think they can get for the money they’re willing to spend is the stuff of great comedy—or tragedy, take your pick. I mean, who actually believes that for $1,200 a month, they can get a three-bedroom/two-bath rental with a balcony within walking distance of the trendiest restaurants and shops in a major U.S. urban center? Before I became an addict, I would have said no one over the age of 12. But since my addiction, I’ve learned that such expectations are fairly common among Americans of all ages.

And speaking of Americans of all ages, what has fascinated me is how often these potential home buyers exhibit two particular mindsets.

Those with the first mindset, while wanting privacy when they close their front door, also want to walk out that door and be immersed in community. If they decide not to cook dinner, they want to stroll down the street to a local restaurant. When walking the dog, they want to pass other dog-walkers, window-shop, or grab a cup of coffee. They like living in the heart of the action.

The second mindset is the exact opposite. Give these folks a McMansion on 40,000 acres in some uncharted wilderness. If they can’t have that, they’ll take a house in the suburbs as long as they can’t see or be seen by neighbors. Their ideal backyard wouldn’t face another yard; it would overlook a swath of forest that might bring to mind a magnificent National Park…or the abode of a serial killer from a slasher film.

If one mindset craves the adrenaline rush of constant social connection, the other craves life in a fortress of solitude. I wonder if these mindsets in the extreme have something to do with the divisiveness currently wracking our nation.

Of course, millions of us are somewhere between these two mindsets. We love feeling connected to others while valuing the necessity of time alone. In the end, it’s all about finding the proper balance.
Anyone who goes shopping in a big box store or any other business selling school supplies in August has been overwhelmed by families jamming the aisles of notebooks, pencils, paper, lunch boxes, backpacks, hand sanitizer, and tissues. That doesn’t even include the back-to-school clothing aisles, with parents trying to weigh their children’s ideas of appropriate attire against what they fear might warrant a phone call from the principal on the first day of school.

September brings out the big yellow buses and the beginning of a new school year. While so many people make this possible, teachers will be the focus of this month’s column. There is a crisis in education today, and we are all affected by it. It doesn’t matter whether you currently have children in school. Schools form the bedrock of our democracy. A well-educated citizenry requires committed, well-trained teachers to open the minds of their students and educate an educated citizenry. A well-educated citizenry requires committed, well-trained teachers to open the minds of their students and educate an educated citizenry.

I had the privilege of visiting South Africa with a group of educators in 2013, just two months before Mandela’s death. We traveled to many of the areas that shaped his life. He spoke of the importance of education often. It is the responsibility of all citizens to support the teachers in our schools. As we begin a new school year, let’s make a commitment to encourage our leaders to solve this critical shortage in our communities.

A career educator, Dr. Rebecca Adams has served as a teacher in grades two through graduate school, reading specialist, principal, and an educational foundation administrator. She was selected as Chesapeake’s First Citizen 2016 for her community service.

By Dr. Becky Adams
Michael Benedetto has fond memories of spending summers in Virginia Beach as a teenager during the late 1970s and early 1980s. “I’m originally from New York,” he explains. “But as soon as school ended each year, my parents, three siblings, and I came down to a small condo in Virginia Beach, and we didn’t head back to New York until school started in early September.” When Michael recalls those summers, one doesn’t hear about sand, surf, and lazy afternoons spent sunbathing or catching a wave. Instead, Michael and his siblings spent those summers working outside at the materials recovery facility for their family’s business, TFC Recycling, located in Chesapeake.

Founded in 1973, Tidewater Fibre Corp (now referred to as TFC Recycling) is now Virginia’s largest residential curbside recycler. Through partnerships and agreements with local and municipal governments and public service authorities, the company provides recycling services for over 600,000 households in six of Virginia’s largest cities and more than 4,000 commercial customers in Virginia and North Carolina. Headquartered in Chesapeake, TFC employs over 350 people and operates more than 180 collection and transfer vehicles.

“We’re a local, family-owned company that’s been doing the right thing for our employees, our community, and the environment for generations,” Michael says with a proud smile. Despite being Virginia’s largest residential curbside recycler, TFC Recycling had humble beginnings. “In the early years, we were operating the business out of a single-wide trailer,” Michael recalls. Before the technological advances of the 1980s, ’90s, and beyond, the business of recycling was a hands-on, laborious, time-consuming endeavor. Michael’s parents, Joseph and Susann Benedetto, required him to do the toughest, dirtiest jobs, learning the business from the ground up. But this family-owned business’s humble roots go back generations.

“My great-grandfather, Dominic Benedetto, came from Italy through Ellis Island and settled in Brooklyn in the late 1800s,” Michael explains. “At that time, bias against Italian immigrants limited his job opportunities. There’s an old saying: ‘One man’s trash is another man’s treasure.’ My great-grandfather took that to heart. He began collecting old clothes, scraps, and other items, and in 1897, he turned it into a business—one of the first buy-back centers and recycling companies in the U.S. My grandfather, Joseph Benedetto, Sr., born in 1900, continued the recycling business. He began a partnership with a papermill, supplying it with any materials that could be broken down and converted into paper. By the 1950s, he had grown the business into one of the largest recycling operations in the U.S.”

“In the early 1970s, my dad wanted to grow and modernize the company,” Michael continues, “but my grandfather, who had lived through the Great Depression and didn’t want to borrow money, wasn’t interested. So, my dad struck out on his own. Banks in Virginia were more friendly than those in New York, so my dad was able to get a $50,000 loan. In 1973, he opened his own business, Tidewater Fibre Corp., here in Chesapeake, and the loan allowed him to build a 20,000-square-foot building with a baler and conveyer belt. To this day, that building is still part of TFC’s operations.”

“We’re a local, family-owned company that’s been doing the right thing for our employees, our community, and the environment for generations.”

—Michael Benedetto

With TFC Recycling firmly established, the family moved permanently from New York to Hampton Roads. In the late 1970s, methods used to collect and sort recyclable material were still primitive by today’s standards. But the family was determined that TFC be at the forefront of progress and change. “In the early 1980s, we purchased our first roll-off truck, like the ones now used at building sites to collect debris,” Michael recalls. “We rented these containers to area department stores, and they’d throw their cardboard into them. The roll-off trucks allowed us to place recycling containers at churches and non-profits for fund-raising.”

In the 1980s, American attitudes toward recycling changed for the better thanks to one major newsworthy event. New York City had reached its landfill capacity and agreed to ship its garbage via a barge—the Mobro 4000—to a landfill in Morehead City, North Carolina. When rumors spread that the barge’s entire shipment had been contaminated by debris from a New York City hospital, Carolina’s environmental watchdogs demanded that the city certify the trash contained no toxic wastes or harmful materials. Unsatisfied with New York’s response, North Carolina officials obtained a court order prohibiting the Mobro from unloading anywhere in their state. States along the eastern seaboard followed suit, as did Mexico. Months later, the barge was finally allowed to anchor in New Jersey, and its cargo was incinerated. The incident—cited by environmentalists and the media as evidence of a landfill shortage—triggered a national discussion about solid waste disposal, which evolved into mandatory recycling rates by the late 1980s.

“Laws were enacted in Virginia that deemed landfills unsanitary,” Michael explains. “There was concern about contaminating water supplies. Virginia and other states issued recycling mandates. The Southeastern Public Service Authority—founded in 1973 to manage waste—started a pilot curbside recycling program in the late 1980s to meet Virginia’s 25 percent recycling mandate. Needing a home for recycling materials, the SPSA issued a request for proposals. We submitted the most qualified bid and got the contract.”

“Back then, small bins were used for residential recycling,” Michael says. “People would fill them, leave them outside, and SPSA trucks picked them up. The driver would hop out of the truck and personally sort through each bin, dividing the debris into six compartments, each designated for particular materials. Plastic bottle bins filled up quickly in the summers; the cardboard bins filled up quickly during the holidays. When a bin filled up, the driver had to drive the truck back to the facility and empty it before returning to his route to continue collecting. That process was expensive because it required so many trucks, drivers, and man-hours.”

“Recycling is good, and a city-wide curbside collection is the most efficient and effective way to do it.”

—Michael Benedetto

Step by step, TFC made the process of collecting recyclables more efficient.

“A shift began toward using trucks with only two compartments instead of six—one for paper, one for bottles and cans,” Michael explains. “Some trucks even came with dividers that could be moved to accommodate seasonal variations. Soon after, compaction was introduced, and the process became even more efficient.”

Another advance was the move to using larger collection carts in the 1990s. Michael is particularly proud of the partnership that TFC established at that time with the City of Virginia Beach.

“Virginia Beach was a leader in recycling,” Michael says. “By partnering with them, we became the first company in the U.S. to collect and process recyclable materials, all mixed together, from 95-gallon carts with wheels and lids. Collection trucks with arms could pick up and empty these carts. We made a costly, inefficient recycling service more efficient by using technology from other industries to separate materials. Placing all recyclable materials together in a cart made it easier for residents to transport recyclables to the curb; it provided more capacity for more material to be recycled and a lid to keep material dry and from littering the neighborhood. It also limited the number of trucks and drivers because a household could be serviced in less than a minute, versus spending five-to-ten minutes per household. Recyclables could be sorted in our Materials Recovery Facility rather than by the drivers on the street.”

The program that TFC developed was so efficient that the company’s partnership with Virginia Beach served as a model for partnerships now used in over 250 cities nationwide. “We, along with the City of Virginia Beach, take some credit for inventing and perfecting the current single stream collection and separation process,” Michael smiles. TFC’s role as a leading innovator in recycling technology continued into the 21st century.

“In 2006, we installed the most expensive, automated recycling recovery system at that time in Chesapeake,” Michael says. “Recyclables were dumped from a truck onto a conveyor belt. Materials traveled to a mechanical screen that sorted paper from glass, metal, and plastic bottles and cans by size and shape. Seven optical sorting units—actual cameras over conveyor belts that used infrared technology to sort by size, shape, and composition—were installed. This was the most state-of-the-art materials recovery system anywhere in the world. The optical sorting units assisted the mechanical screens in separating materials for recycling. Additionally, magnetic separators were installed to remove steel and aluminum cans. After materials were separated, they were baled for shipment to mills worldwide. From 1996 to today, hundreds of visitors from small to multinational companies and dozens of countries have come to see what we are doing and how we are doing it. Additionally, we offer tours to residents and businesses to show that materials are being captured and recycled. We taught the world the most efficient and effective way to collect and process recyclable waste—a technology and system used efficiently today.”

In 2011, TFC started “Recycling Perks,” an incentive program that promotes participation in curbside recycling and environmental stewardship. As residents recycle, they are awarded points that allow them to claim free rewards from local businesses participating in the program. “We really want to get people to recycle more material often,” Michael says. “It’s a great win-win-win-win program: businesses get free advertising and door traffic, residents get free products and services, cities collect less waste, and TFC collects more recyclables.

In 2013, TFC became the first company in Virginia to install a compressed natural gas filling station. “There’s so much debate nationally about not supporting hostile foreign countries by continuing to buy fossil fuel from them,” Michael notes. “Compressed natural gas (CNG) is not a fossil fuel. It’s cleaner, doesn’t contribute to climate change, is produced in the U.S., and delivered by Virginia Natural Gas. It was refreshing to see cities and other companies following our lead and changing over to compressed natural gas.”

Concerned about the pace of climate change and how it will affect our children, Michael is nevertheless optimistic about steps that can be taken now and in the future.

“Instead of cutting down a tree to make paper, we use recycled cardboard and paper to make new boxes,” he says. “We can mine aluminum, which pollutes the atmosphere and uses so much energy, or, on the other hand, we can simply recycle existing aluminum cans. Recycling is good, and a city-wide curbside collection is the most efficient and effective way to do it.”

“In our day and age, there are people who recognize climate change and rising sea levels and realize what is happening to our planet,” Michael continues. “School kids and teenagers are teaching their parents about recycling. What drove my generation when it came to our homes—turning off lights, turning off the water faucets while brushing teeth or shaving, adjusting the thermostat up and down to save energy—we need to have that same conservationist mindset when it comes to the environment.”

To those who say recycling will not make a difference, Michael offers a story:

“A father and a son are walking along a beach covered with stranded starfish. When the son throws a starfish back into the ocean to save it, the father says, ‘Son, there are so many starfish that you can’t make a difference.’ And the son, continuing to throw starfish back into the water, responds: ‘I made a difference to that starfish.’”

“Recycling is good, and a city-wide curbside collection is the most efficient and effective way to do it.”

—Michael Benedetto

September 2022  The Greenbrier/River Walk Shopper  Page 11
The 13th Annual Mayor’s Breakfast to Honor Veterans

SEPTEMBER 17, 2022
8:00 a.m. - 11:00 a.m.
Chesapeake Conference Center
700 Conference Center Drive
Preregistration Required • Seating is Limited
www.CityofChesapeake.net/Veterans

Join Mayor Rick West and your fellow veterans for this special tribute that honors your service and sacrifice.

BREAKFAST IS FREE • DONATIONS ARE WELCOMED

Point of Contact:
Commissioner James Keiper | mcva@cityofchesapeake.net

Human Balance

We humans are quite interesting. We are all uniquely different yet surprisingly similar. We are the only primates that walk around on only two legs; that is more efficient but also more unstable. Interestingly, most of us no longer have to chase our food, nor are other animals generally chasing us, so over time, we have lost a step in terms of agility and balance.

Through the COVID-19 pandemic, most have experienced a decline in activity, an increase in sitting, and an increase in STRESS! COVID infection survivors have expressed dizziness as a symptom of acute infection and long COVID. This is playing a role in the patients we are currently seeing at FYZICAL Therapy and Balance Center Chesapeake.

As we walk on this earth, we are either walking on something flat and stable, like a wood floor, or something unstable, like rocks, sand, etc. We need to be balanced on both types of surfaces—even when we are standing on only one foot. This is quite hard for some.

Our vision is also very important to us. Usually, we have our vision to help us; sometimes, we don’t, and at other times, we think we do, but we are wrong. Two different floor conditions and three different eye conditions can result in six possible combinations. If we are good at balancing in all six of these combinations, we generally feel fine and steady on our feet. But if we don’t balance well in one or more of these conditions, we experience conflict, which is expressed as dizziness. The worse it is, the more we are at risk of falling.

Humans have three systems that keep us upright and balanced. What we see, what we touch, and what we sense with our inner ear.

Humans have three systems that keep us upright and balanced. What we see, what we touch, and what we sense with our inner ear (Vestibular System). It is essential that all three of these systems work well together and individually to ensure proper upright balance. The testing available at FYZICAL will compare you to other men/women of your age and height, as well as your sense of balance in all six conditions. It will also determine which systems you are over-or-under utilizing. This provides your therapist with the most specific and sensitive data available to efficiently understand your needs and treat your condition. All of this while completely safe and harnessed.

Other factors are also at play when it comes to balance. We test for positional vertigo (BPPV) and provide immediate treatments. We also assess your blood pressure lying down and then as soon as you stand up. Rapid drops in blood pressure can cause dizziness, and we are seeing this more frequently since COVID. Sensation testing for peripheral neuropathy is also provided. We also evaluate and treat all adult orthopedic and neurological conditions.

FYZICAL takes a comprehensive, holistic approach to managing your dizziness and fall risk. Please call (757) 290-0202 for scheduling information.
American Business Women’s Day (September 22) honors the accomplishments of businesswomen nationwide.

Of course, women have been involved in business since the first Colonists landed in America. For over 300 years, most Americans lived on family farms, and the work women performed there was essential to the success of those family businesses. By 1920, however, when, for the first time, most Americans lived in towns and cities and worked in factories or corporate institutions, “a woman’s work” had been relegated to homemaking and childrearing.

That changed in 1941 when America was plunged into World War II. With so many working-age men drafted into the military, women were suddenly needed to fill jobs in factories, government institutions, and private businesses. Overnight, women who worked full-time jobs were not frowned upon but celebrated for their patriotism. Popular opinions reversed when the war ended in 1945 and women were expected to leave the workplace and return to homemaking. Some people, however, bucked that trend.

Kansas City businessman Hilary Buffman Jr. believed that American women, having gained tremendous business knowledge during the war, deserved equal business opportunities with men. In 1949, he sat down in a local coffee shop with Shirley Cupp, Irma Beisel, and Frances Stuckey to discuss founding an organization to support business women.

That meeting resulted in the founding of the American Business Women’s Association on September 22, 1949—the mission of which is “to bring together businesswomen of diverse occupations and to provide opportunities for them to help themselves and others grow personally and professionally through leadership, education, networking support and national recognition.”

That mission statement can also be applied to American Business Women’s Day, celebrated annually on the anniversary of the association’s founding. The holiday was officially recognized in 1983 and 1986 by Congressional resolution and a proclamation issued by President Ronald Reagan.

Today women are essential to the U.S. economy, with 68 million in the workforce and 7.7 million owning businesses.

Being a woman-owned business, The Shopper salutes working women everywhere. To read the stories of local businesswomen, as well as businessmen, we encourage you to read each issue in print and online at www.theshopper.com.

By Rob Lauer
Where to find us

Chesapeake Visitor’s Center
1224 Progressive Drive, Chesapeake

Ann’s Hallmark
237 S. Battlefield Blvd, Chesapeake

Great Bridge Frame & Art
316 Battlefield Blvd South, Chesapeake

Hemp Haven
480 Kempsville Rd, Chesapeake

Edinburgh Family Dentistry
200 Carmichael Way, Suite 612 Chesapeake

Edinburgh Animal Hospital
233 Hillcrest Pkwy, Chesapeake

Currituck Outer Banks Visitor’s Center
106 Caratoke Hwy, Moyock, NC

Moyock Farm Market
193 Camellia Drive Moyock, NC

Taylor’s Do-It Center
100 Lark Drive, Moyock, NC

Taylor’s Do-It Center
330 S. Battlefield Blvd., Chesapeake

Taylor’s Do-It Center
3235 Bridge Road, Suffolk

Family Flooring
300 Battlefield Blvd. N, Chesapeake

Accordo Chiropractic
733 Volvo Pkwy. #150, Chesapeake

The Bypass 168
237 Carmichael Way, Chesapeake

Greenbrier Library
1214 Volvo Parkway, Chesapeake

Indian River Library
2320 Old Greenbrier Rd. , Chesapeake

Major Hillard Library
824 George Washington Hwy N, Chesapeake

Cuffee Library
2726 Border Rd , Chesapeake

EIT Small Business Center
316 Battlefield Blvd S, Suite A, Chesapeake

Dennis’s Spaghetti & Steak House
3356 Western Branch Blvd., Chesapeake

It’s all about Trust

You trusted John to guard our precious tax dollars…and he has!
—Proposed and voted for a 4.5 cent decrease in your Real Estate Tax
—Protected and increased real estate tax relief for seniors, disabled, and veterans
—Voted AGAINST raising your meals tax and vehicle registration fees

You trusted John to support our Schools…and he has!
—Created the School Lock Box which has funded over $100 Million for school construction —Voted to fund new school construction at Western Branch H.S., Chittum, B.M. Williams, and Great Bridge Primary
—This fiscal year, advocated and voted for an additional $23 Million to help meet Schools’ current financial challenges

You trusted John to support Public Safety to protect our families…and he has!
—This fiscal year, approved a Public Safety Compensation Plan to retain and recruit valuable public safety personnel
— Appropriated $61 Million for the Police Department—a 13% increase
— Appropriated $60 Million for Fire/EMS Services

You trusted John to make common sense decisions…and he has!
—Proposed and voted to keep city-funded curbside recycling
—Voted to protect the interests of our valuable military presence in Hampton Roads
—Voted against major residential rezoning that would burden our schools and roads

When you want to be trusted, you’ve got to work to earn that trust.”
—John de Triquet

Authorized and Paid for by Friends of John de Triquet

Vote November 8th ★ John de Triquet ★ CITY COUNCIL

In addition to mailed to homes throughout Hampton Roads, The Shopper is now available at the following locations. Drop by to pick up your free copy, and thank our good friends at each location for carrying “your hometown magazine.”
Limiting Beliefs

Dr. Austin has decades of experience dealing with relationships. He charges clients on a sliding scale according to their ability to pay.

Tidewater Pastoral Counseling
(757) 623-2700

Don’t Wear White After Labor Day!... Who Says?

By Rob Lauer

For years I believed that I barely graduated from high school because my grades were so poor. I honestly thought that my worst grades had been in Chemistry. This belief impacted how I saw myself. I put limitations on myself because of it. I even put off working on my doctorate degree for a long time because I believed it would be too much for me.

Then, some time ago, I had a huge surprise. Karen and I were going through old papers when she found my high school report card from my senior year. She brought it to me and said, “I thought you said you didn’t make good grades in high school.”

“I didn’t,” I replied.

“Well, look at this report card,” Karen continued. “It is all A’s and B’s. Even your Chemistry grade is good.”

I was amazed! How in the world did I get this wrong belief about myself? For most of my life, I have struggled with it and put limitations on myself because of it. How did that happen? The question for me now was: would this new information change how I view myself? Would I now discard those limitations I placed on myself?

What if you found out that you have been believing a lie about yourself and your capabilities? What changes would you make? Or would you continue as you are?

Let us challenge one of the beliefs that limit many of us: “Everyone should like me.” When we operate with the belief that everyone should like us, we are minimized if a person is upset with us or criticizes us. We think the problem is with us, not them.

What if you found out that you have been believing a lie about yourself and your capabilities? What changes would you make?

In her book “Celtic Daily Prayer,” Mary Lyon pointed out: “Nine-tenths of our suffering is caused by others not thinking as much of us as we think they ought.” It seems the more we seek another’s approval, the worse we feel about ourselves.

It would be healthy for us to ask ourselves: “Why do I keep trying to impress other people? Each time I do it, I feel worse about myself. I know it doesn’t work, but I keep doing it.”

Perhaps we’re driven by the belief that another person’s approval will change what we believe about ourselves. But even if someone does praise us, we will not accept the compliment unless we believe it to be true.

Constantly seeking approval from others does not work because we are giving someone else the power to decide how we should feel about ourselves. That power and authority should be with us.

Next month we will continue looking at these limiting beliefs and ways to handle them.
Popular Home Improvements

When it comes to ‘sprucing up the place’ for oneself or the real estate market, these improvements top the list

By Rob Lauer

There are times in the lives of all homeowners when they take a good hard look around and realize they are hungry for some major changes. Maybe the realization is triggered while thumbing through a popular home and gardens magazine or watching one of the countless home-improvement programs on TV. Perhaps they’ve begun comparing their home to those of friends and family members. Or maybe they’re contemplating the possibility of selling their home in the next few years and are thinking of making improvements now that could potentially increase its value.

Regardless of the reason, more Americans than ever are making home improvements. According to a study done by Harvard, the home improvement industry has grown by three percent over the last two years. In 2021 alone, Americans spent $538 billion on home improvement, with projected sales expected to reach $625 in 2025.

Home improvements range from inexpensive do-it-yourself projects to pricey undertakings that require professional contractors. What follows are the most popular areas on which Americans currently are spending their time, energy and money.

Landscaping

Curb appeal says a lot about a home. After all, it alone is responsible for everyone’s first impression of a home. While the house’s outward appearance is obviously an important factor, one shouldn’t underestimate the role of landscape in creating a positive first impression. Investing in new landscaping can help make any house look fresh and appealing.

Every view in landscaping should have a focal point. For the front yard, the focal point should always be the front door, so be sure not to hide it. When considering major plantings such as trees, think about how they will frame the front door as people approach the house.

When planting trees in front of a house, remember that they are considered a permanent fixture in the landscape, so think ahead 12 to 15 years. How tall will the species of tree being planted grow? How far out from the trunk will its branches and root system extend? Make sure that trees are not too close to the house. This will decrease the potential of falling branches or limbs damaging the roof or windows in the future, as well as root systems causing issues with the house’s foundation.

Bushes planted around the house should be trimmed so that they do not grow in front of windows. Flowering plants in beds are always a plus, but if one doesn’t have a green thumb or enjoy gardening, consider planting a low-maintenance ground covering.

Add a collection of plants on either side of the front doorway to better tie in the landscaping with the house itself. For a big impact, opt for plants and planters of differing heights, which create a sense of depth in the area. Pick bold colored flowers and verdant greens, or focus on seasonal flowers that can be changed out frequently for a quick refresh.

The Front Door

A new front door is a quick and simple home improvement project that can make a big difference in its appearance and attract buyers when it is put on the market. According to real estate experts, the return on this investment is usually 90 percent.

If a new door isn’t an option, a fresh coat of paint can go a long way in improving a door’s appearance. As long as there are no structural issues (like cracks, chipping paint, or dents), making a front door look new is as easy as a stroll down the paint aisle of a local retailer.

Door knobs, hinges, door knockers, and house numbers can look worse for the wear after years of exposure to the elements. Removing old hardware and replacing it with upgraded new pieces can change a door’s entire appearance. Consider replacing a traditional turn-style knob with a digital keyless entry model or swapping a numerical house number for one that spells the number out in an elegant script.

The Garage Door

As with the front door, homes with front-facing garage can benefit from a garage door replacement. Besides enhancing a home’s overall appearance, an updated garage door can also differentiate the house from all the others in the neighborhood. Because old garage doors can be an eyesore when trying to sell a home, relations estimate the return on this investment usually exceeds the amount spent.

If a home’s driveway is a straight line from the street to the garage door, planting a curved flower bed where the drive meets the front corner of the yard will create a pleasing sweeping effect that enhances the garage’s overall appearance.

Windows

It may come as a surprise, but new windows can significantly improve a home’s appearance, function and value. As windows age, they do a poorer job of insulating a house from the elements. Old windows often mean more allergens in the home, poor insulation, and higher energy bills. Consider replacing them with new, energy-efficient windows. The return on investment for window replacement is generally high, and prospective buyers will appreciate the upgrade when the home is put on the market.

Flooring

Probably no single element of a home’s interior can impact its overall appearance more than new flooring.

In choosing flooring, keep in mind that different board widths create specific effects. Narrow strips (less than three inches wide) are the traditional choice and create the illusion of more space. Wider planks (more than three inches wide) give a room a more rustic appearance, while parquet floors, with their distinctive geometric design, suit formal spaces.

Hardwoods run the gamut from blond to black, depending on species and finish. Consider floors that complement a home’s furniture and accessories when selecting colors and patterns. Hardwoods also vary in durability. Oak, maple, and cherry are used more often due to their hardness. Exotic woods like mahogany and Brazilian cherry aren’t as durable but are prized for their striking appearance.

Hardwoods, such as red oak, will withstand wear and tear for busy households with pets and kids, while softer woods, such as pine, tend to show scratches. The choice between engineered and solid hardwood will most likely be determined by the location, subfloor, and preferred installation.

In choosing flooring, keep in mind that different board widths create specific effects. Narrow strips (less than three inches wide) are the traditional choice and create the illusion of more space. Wider planks (more than three inches wide) give a room a more rustic appearance, while parquet floors, with their distinctive geometric design, suit formal spaces.

Hardwoods run the gamut from blond to black, depending on species and finish. Consider floors that complement a home’s furniture and accessories when selecting colors and patterns. Hardwoods also vary in durability. Oak, maple, and cherry are used more often due to their hardness. Exotic woods like mahogany and Brazilian cherry aren’t as durable but are prized for their striking appearance.

Hardwoods, such as red oak, will withstand wear and tear for busy households with pets and kids, while softer woods, such as pine, tend to show scratches. The choice between engineered and solid hardwood will most likely be determined by the location, subfloor, and preferred installation.
method. Keep in mind that choosing solid hardwood means scratches from a puppy’s claws or dings from a toddler’s toy can be sanded out and refinished over and over. Preventive care and proper maintenance can keep floors looking good for years.

By some estimates, new flooring can yield an average of upwards of 300 percent return on the investment when the home is sold.

The Kitchen

They say the kitchen is the heart of the home. It’s where a family cooks, eats, socializes with guests, and spends quality time together. So, it makes sense to make this space as welcoming as possible. If appliances look a little dated or the layout is no longer practical, perhaps it’s time to start from scratch with a brand-new look.

Replacing old appliances, including major ones like fridges and stoves, will make a kitchen more attractive and efficient and command a higher price when the home is sold. Recent surveys show that having to replace old and outdated appliances tops the list of turn-offs for potential home buyers.

Drawer pulls and cabinet handles made of metals that were trendy decades ago can make any kitchen look old. Popular metals used in modern kitchen design include matte aluminum, stainless steel, brushed gold, and copper. Installing new pulls and handles on existing cabinetry is a relatively inexpensive upgrade that can make a huge visual impact.

Countertops are a large portion of any kitchen’s landscape. While outdated kitchens may have tile-and-grout or cheap vinyl covering the workspace, the variety of countertop surface options now available is impressive. From solid surfacing varieties that consist of resin and polymers to natural stone varieties such as marble and granite, there’s an option for everyone’s style and budget. Over the last few years, designers have become increasingly creative and are using heavy-duty structural materials for countertops, such as brick, tile, soapstone and quartz.

Because the kitchen is typically the busiest area in a home and the place where people are most likely to congregate, adding an island, countertop, or breakfast bar with seating brings new life to the space. From families with children doing homework to parents entertaining friends while cooking, kitchen seating has become essential to the modern home.

Kitchen lighting, while often an afterthought, is essential for safety and ambiance. If a kitchen contains only one overhead ambient lighting fixture, consider installing recessed lighting with a dimmer switch for versatility while entertaining, cooking, or just relaxing for a midnight snack. Under-cabinet lighting to illuminate countertops and pendant lighting over a kitchen island are practical additions that also create a feeling of elegance.

The Bathroom

Over the last decade, homeowners and homebuyers have embraced the idea of the bathroom as a spa-like retreat from the world. But one needn’t do an entire bathroom overhaul to help achieve that aesthetic.

Whether painting the walls or installing new tiles, choose soft, muted colors to establish a tranquil environment. Avoid high-contrast pairings, such as black and white or blue and orange, which often appear bold and energizing rather than calming. Pairing warm neutrals with nature-inspired colors like seafoam green or sky blue creates peaceful palettes that would look right at home in an upscale spa.

Create a bright, airy look by outfitting a bathroom with lots of shimmering reflective surfaces. Large-scale mirrors, chrome fixtures, and polished tile all produce a sense of lightness and brightness, which can lift one’s mood.

Because tubs and showers are usually the focal points of any bathroom, replacing them can completely transform the space. A glass shower door lends a luxurious look to any bathroom, but the reason for installing one might not be all about looks. Because this shower lacks a ledge or lip to step over when entering the shower, it is an excellent choice for aging family members or anyone with mobility difficulties. As in a lavish spa, a seat in the shower will encourage relaxation, making it a fantastic minor upgrade. Tile the bench to match the rest of the shower, or add a bar made of a contrasting material like teak or glass.

Replacing outdated faucets, lighting, and bathroom accessories is a great way to refresh the space while tailoring it to one’s personal style.

Does one’s bathroom need more storage? Are family members tired of sharing one sink? Replacing the vanity is an excellent solution that improves a bathroom’s functionality while enhancing its visual appeal.

Changing a bathroom’s flooring or updating tiles can help create a customized look that will attract buyers when the time comes to sell a home.

A Fresh Coat of Paint

Sometimes a fresh coat of paint is all it takes to bring a room back to life. It’s also a great do-it-yourself project that won’t cost an arm and a leg. Painting a room in neutral colors such as whites, grays, or creams creates the feeling of a larger and cleaner space.

Kitchens, in particular, can take on a dramatically new look by simply painting the existing cabinets. From white to blue to two-tone looks, color options are nearly limitless. Bring home samples and examine them in the light throughout the day. How does it look in natural and artificial light? Find a color that looks great in both and compliments current fixtures, appliances, and countertops. Painting cabinet boxes, doors, and drawer faces can be time-consuming (experts recommend setting aside three days for the task), but it is also one of the most noticeable and rewarding updates any homeowner can do.
CELEBRATING ALL ABILITIES IN OUR COMMUNITY

ABILITY RUN 2022

5K & 1 MILE FUN RUN
SATURDAY OCTOBER 15, 2022
8:00 Kick-off
9:00 5K Run
10:30 1 Mile Fun Walk/Roll
Mt. Trashmore Park
Virginia Beach, VA

#whatsyourABILITY

FARMERS MARKET
NOW IN TWO LOCATIONS!!!!

Wednesdays
10:00 - 2:30
A.M.  P.M.
CHESAPEAKE HEALTH DEPARTMENT
748 BATTLEFIELD BLVD.
(BEHIND CHESAPEAKE REGIONAL HEALTHCARE)
382-8650

Thursdays
9:00 - 1:00
A.M.  P.M.
WESTERN TIDEWATER HEALTH DISTRICT
135 HALL AVE.
(SUFFOLK SOCIAL SERVICES BLDG.)
514-4765

Doctor To Doctor Magazine

NEW ISSUE COMING SOON!

Doctor To Doctor Magazine is mailed to medical professionals throughout Southside Hampton Roads and Northeastern North Carolina.

Call 757-547-0520 to reserve your advertising space in our upcoming issue
Email: info@DoctorToDoctorMagazine.com

Read our current issue online at DoctorToDoctorMagazine.com
At Virginia Oncology Associates, we understand every cancer is unique and so is every patient we treat. Our team of experienced physicians and staff provide advanced care, innovative technology, and personalized treatment options. This includes research and groundbreaking clinical trials taking place right here in Hampton Roads, giving our patients access to therapies not yet available outside of the studies. Virginia Oncology Associates is an affiliate of the US Oncology Network, one of the largest cancer treatment and research networks in the country. This affiliation enables us to incorporate the expertise of nearly 1,350 physicians nationwide into our delivery of patient care.

Your Cancer Care Team in Chesapeake

Expert Physicians. Exceptional Care.

757-549-4403 | 744 N. Battlefield Blvd., Ste. 200, Chesapeake, VA 23320

VirginiaCancer.com

Virginia Oncology Associates is part of The US Oncology Network and is supported by McKesson Specialty Health. © 2022 McKesson Specialty Health. All rights reserved.
Career Opportunities

What we offer:

• Competitive Compensation, Signing and Retention Bonuses
  (Teachers sign by September 16th for an extra $2500.00 for this school year)
• Full and Part-Time Schedules
• PAID Vacation & Company Holidays
• PAID Extensive training and opportunities for continual learning and development for staff
• Health Care - Medical/Dental/Prescription Drug Coverage
• YMCA Discounted Membership
• A working environment in which team members respect one another—team building!
• A School Leadership Team that supports the professional and personal growth of the staff
• Teachers have clear expectations, necessary resources, and support to meet children’s needs

Primrose School at Cahoon Commons
660 Grassfield Parkway
Chesapeake
757.842.6589
www.PrimroseCahoonCommons.com

Primrose School at Edinburgh Commons
213 Carmichael Way
Chesapeake
757.410.8622
www.PrimroseEdinburghCommons.com

Apply Today!

Popular Home Improvements

When it comes to ‘sprucing up the place’ for oneself or the real estate market, these improvements top the list

Page 16